Typically, the Humanities use the Chicago Manual of Style for research papers. The The Chicago Manual of Style provides the formats for notes and citations. Another useful resource for the Chicago Manual of Style is the Writing with Sources: a Guide for Students as an official pocket guide to be used as a quick reference tool.

The Chicago Manual of Style

The Chicago Manual of Style online resources:

Diana Hacker's guide to the Chicago Manual of Style

The Chicago Manual of Style Online

These titles offer guidelines that supplement The Chicago Manual of Style:

Writing with sources: a guide for students

Student guide to research in the digital age: how to locate and evaluate information sources

Chicago Style Documentation

Chicago style research papers require you to number your intext sources and document them within your paper as either footnotes or endnotes. Each note should be single spaced with a double space between each subsequent note unless otherwise directed.

Text
Trauma can move across time and space implying that "the ghost has an agency of its own...more powerful than either the subject who first experienced the trauma or the inheritor of the secret."

Footnote or Endnote

Subsequent Notes

For subsequent notes from the same source just list the author’s last name and the title of the work along with the page number of the source.

Consecutive Notes

When using consecutive notes from the same source, you can use ibid. (in the same place) and the page number where the note was taken from.

14. ibid., 43.

15. ibid., 47.

Model Notes and Bibliographic Entries

All bibliographic entries should be arranged alphabetically and entered single spaced with a double space between each entry.
